DR. POMAINVILLE HEALTH OFFICER TALKS ON DISEASE

CITY HEALTH OFFICER GIVES RECORD OF THE PREVENTATIVE METHODS TAKEN IN COMBATING DISEASE.

Dr. F. X. Pomainville, city health officer, told the members of the Rotary Club, in an address this noon, that the causes of many diseases were traceable and that medical science knew how to eliminate them. His message was the prevention of disease and his remarks are as follows:

"Sickness and disease are among the oldest facts known to man. In the past there seemed to be no other course to man but to bow the back and accept the burden. Today we can trace the causes of many diseases and eliminate them. Some of the things that have been accomplished I will relate. The future possibilities of the work and its results I will leave to your imagination.

Pasteur Started Prevention

"Preventive medicine really began with the basic work of Pasteur and the studies of Kock, Reed, Noguchi and many others. These studies and discoveries made possible by the microscope and the new chemistry have demonstrated that the cause of most communicable diseases were due to germs. The cause of disease known, naturally lead to means for disease prevention. More than 500,000 people in the United States die annually from preventable diseases and five million during the same period are incapacitated as a result of them. This great economic loss is preventable. In other words our health is a measure is purchasable.

War Demonstrated Tyranny

"The war demonstrated that the tyranny of the disease germ could be conquered. When we consider that never before in human history was there such an intermingling of people, such a crossing and re-crossing of seas, straining every nerve for victory, the combatants had to make sure that no epidemic should attack them from the rear. The firing line extended from the English Channel to Bagdad. Yet in spite of such an invitation for contagion to spread to the ends of the world only one epidemic succeeded in breaking the barrier and that was influenza, a practical stranger to medical science. No contagion with which medicine was acquainted escaped from the region where it was endemic. Small pox, Typhoid, Typhus, Cholera, Plague.

Trenches Held Dangers

"Conditions in the trenches in France were such that the battle lines of France might easily have become an inferno of infection, but preventive medicine stepped in and again held typhoid, malaria, small pox, venereal disease and other diseases in check in a way that was strikingly effective.

"The lesson learned in the war spurred the medical world to continue the work with redoubled energy and today we know that yellow fever has practically been banished from the earth; that hook worm disease, which is prevalent in a zone that embraces half the earth's population can be driven from any community that has the will to get rid of it. That malaria can be eradicated by any community that has vitality enough to carry on a campaign for for its extermination."

Diseases Preventable

The doctor spoke of the work done in the prevention of many diseases including yellow fever, malaria, hook worm, small pox, diphtheria, tetanus, typhoid, venereal diseases, tuberculosis, goitre, and others explaining causes and methods of prevention. He said that plagues and epidemics of these diseases were preventable if the diseases could be discovered before they gained hold on the individuals or groups.

Upholds County Nurse

The work of County Nurse Clancy and School Nurse Schroedel was endorsed by the doctor. There is a move on foot not to abolish the county nurse and it is being agitated by some mighty cheap people. The detection of a disease in one child in one school in time to prevent its development in that one child or in the school is worth thousands and yes, millions of dollars. Who can tell? The life of some child saved by the assistance of the county nurse may mean the saving of some great man or woman, such as Lincoln or a Nightingale for this country.

Blaine In Appeal To President To Take Over Mines

Madison, Wis., Aug. 30—Gov. J. J. Blaine of Wisconsin appealed to President Harding today to ask authority of congress to take over and operate the coal mines of the nation and the coal carrying railroads as a necessary step to avert the possible "famine come to the people of this state unless they get coal now."

"This power can be exercised and the movement of coal to the northwest started within forty-eight hours," Governor Blaine telegraphed to the president, saying that "the duty and responsibility, Mr. President, is in your hands."

Asks Protction for People

The governor asked President Harding whether the federal government was "impotent and helpless in the grip of the coal barons, or whether it will assert its power to protect its people."

Following is the message sent by the Wisconsin governor:

"There appears to be no hope for the northwest to get coal. Industries will be compelled in a few days to close, throwing out of employment hundreds of thousands of men. The furnace fires in the homes and institutions must be started within three weeks and there is no coal.

"With hundreds of thousands of men suffering from unemployment, the pinch of winter without coal may involve the most fatal consequences. We not only face a crisis, but a tragfederal government impotent and helpless in the grip of the coal barons, or will the federal government assert its power to protect its people? Congress is in session and I beg of you to immediately ask congress for full power to take over and operate the coal mines and coal carrying railroads. This power can be exercised and the movement of coal to the northwest started within forty-eight hours.

"The duty and responsibility, Mr. President, is in your hands. I beg of you to act at once and avert the possible fatal consequences that are sure to come to our people unless they get coal now."

G. O. P. CONTESTS IN PRIMARY HOLD COUNTY INTEREST

PRESENT INCUMBENTS IN COUNTY OFFICERS FACING CONTESTS FOR RE-ELECTION; FOUR SEEK SHERIFF JOB.

With no candidates in the field from the Democratic and Prohibition parties, and no contests in the ranks of the Socialist, interest in the approaching primary elecion September 5, as far as county contests are concerned is centered almost entirely on he contests in the Republican party. Nomination on the Republican ticket in Wood County has in recent years been equivalent to election, so the candidates are expending their best effort prior to the vote Tuesday.

Four Out for Sheriff

The present incumbents are out for re-election for all offices except that of District Attorney. Sheriff Walter Mueller, with a record of two years of successful administration of the office behind him, faces a hard fight in his campaign for re-election. The present incumbent is opposed by John J. Ebbe of Pittsville, Wm. A. Cole of Vesper and James A. Bogie of Wisconsin Rapids, all of whom have been active in soliciting the votes of the citizens of the county. Mr. Cole is well known for his record as game warden, while both of the others have large personal followings.

Sam Church is conceded to have a material advantage over E. L. Rennie in the race for the county clerkship although supporters of the latter are by no means admitting his defeat. Mr. Church has made a good record during his long term of service, and has made many friends throughout the county by his efficient administration of the office. Henry Ebbe, present Register of Deeds, is opposed by Percy M. Cutler of Arpin and Charles Natwick of this city, both of whom have been active in soliciting votes.

In the contest for the district attorneyship Raymond R. Williams of Marshfield has been conceded an advantage over James C. Dutton of Nekoosa his opponent. Friends of the latter assert however that he has gone far toward overcoming the head start which was given Williams by his wide acquaintanceship in the county, and a close vote is predicted.

La Vigne Unopposed

James La Vigne, county treasurer is unopposed in his race for re-election as are A. B. Bever, clerk of court, and G. W. Severns, surveyor.

Engineer Killed In Train Wreck At Waukesha Today

(By Associated Press)

Milwaukee, Wis. Aug. 30.—Harry True, Baraboo, engineer was killed, Frank Tryer, firemen, severely scalded and a half dozen passengers shaken up today when the Chicago & Northwestern train No. 610 from Madison this forenoon was wrecked near Waukesha.

The train carried 300 passengers including a large number of Red Arrow veterans returning from 32nd Division convention at Madison. The engine went into the ditch, pinning the engineer underneath.

Gravel and sand had been packed close to the rails by scores of autoists enroute to the fair, according to one report, until a solid pack became wedged between the rails, causing the engine to rise and run off the track.

Early reports which reached Henry Stroud, chief of the Bureau of Investigation of the federal department of justice, blamed the wreck upon plotters who were said to have packed sand and gravel next to the rails to derail the trains.

This was discounted by Sheriff A. C. Keebler who speed to the spot to make an investigation.

Hospital Is Glad To Receive All Extra Vegetables

All extra tomatoes, vegetables and fruit which residents of this community may have at this season of the year and who do not know how to dispose of this surplus are asked to call Riverview Hospital if they are willing to donate the fruit and garden truck to the hospital. People who have means of conveying this surplus food to the hospital are asked to do so, while those who are unable to deliver it are asked to phone the superintendent who will make arrangements to have it called for promptly.

Have Need For It

Hospital officials state that they have need for extra vegetables at this time in order to can them for future use at the hospital. "We can use all the tomatoes, fresh vegetables of all sorts, fruit and other contributions of foodstuffs that people have a surplus of at this time and we will be mighty appreciative of the donations," one official stated.

Surplus is Here

Many people who have been luxuriantly blessed with an over abundance of vegetables this year on account of the fine crop results in their gardens have vegetables going to waste. One woman phoned the Tribune and said that she had more tomatoes than she could possibly use or can and had furnished all her neighbors and still has a large supply left. She wondered what to do with them. It is highly probable that many other people have an abundant supply going to waste, who would gladly give to this worthy institution.

Engineer Killed In Train Wreck At Waukesha Today

(By Associated Press)

Milwaukee, Wis. Aug. 30.—Harry True, Baraboo, engineer was killed, Frank Tryer, firemen, severely scalded and a half dozen passengers shaken up today when the Chicago & Northwestern train No. 610 from Madison this forenoon was wrecked near Waukesha.

The train carried 300 passengers including a large number of Red Arrow veterans returning from 32nd Division convention at Madison. The engine went into the ditch, pinning the engineer underneath.

Gravel and sand had been packed close to the rails by scores of autoists enroute to the fair, according to one report, until a solid pack became wedged between the rails, causing the engine to rise and run off the track.

Early reports which reached Henry Stroud, chief of the Bureau of Investigation of the federal department of justice, blamed the wreck upon plotters who were said to have packed sand and gravel next to the rails to derail the trains.

This was discounted by Sheriff A. C. Keebler who speed to the spot to make an investigation.

Marital Tangle Murder

When William Hughes (below) returned to Portland, Mich., from Alaska he found that his wife had divoced him and married his brother, David Hughes. William lived with them for several weeks and then shot his brother to death and killed himself after failing to kill Mrs. Hughes and her daughter.

Hospital Is Glad To Receive All Extra Vegetables

All extra tomatoes, vegetables and fruit which residents of this community may have at this season of the year and who do not know how to dispose of this surplus are asked to call Riverview Hospital if they are willing to donate the fruit and garden truck to the hospital. People who have means of conveying this surplus food to the hospital are asked to do so, while those who are unable to deliver it are asked to phone the superintendent who will make arrangements to have it called for promptly.

Have Need For It

Hospital officials state that they have need for extra vegetables at this time in order to can them for future use at the hospital. "We can use all the tomatoes, fresh vegetables of all sorts, fruit and other contributions of foodstuffs that people have a surplus of at this time and we will be mighty appreciative of the donations," one official stated.

Surplus is Here

Many people who have been luxuriantly blessed with an over abundance of vegetables this year on account of the fine crop results in their gardens have vegetables going to waste. One woman phoned the Tribune and said that she had more tomatoes than she could possibly use or can and had furnished all her neighbors and still has a large supply left. She wondered what to do with them. It is highly probable that many other people have an abundant supply going to waste, who would gladly give to this worthy institution.

A RAILROAD ANNIVERSARY

An anniversary significant in railroad annals was recently celebrated when the famous Twentieth Century Limited running in record time between New York and Chicago closed the twentieth year of its service. In June, 1902, the Limited was dubbed "the train which made Chicago a suburb of New York," and it carried 54 passengers on its first trip. Today the train has increased its service to the extent of two, and sometimes three, sections daily, each carrying from eight to ten cars, instead of the five cars of former days. The cost of the modern "Pacific" locomotive on the Twentieth Century is almost four times that if the first engine, or more than half that of the entire train on the first trip.

The tremendous increase in the patronage of this cross-country limited is important in demonstrating the large number of travelers between East and West. A trip across the continent is no longer a matter of wonder and great preparation, but has become customary among not a few individuals. The rapid transit of newspapers aids in the unifying in thought and opinion wide it separated districts of the country. Provincialism in the United States is coming to be a thing of the past.

UNMAKING THE CITIES

Charles A. Coffin, one of the foremost modern electricians, declares that the development of electric power has made the city, and that further development will go on to unmake it. Electricity is making it possible to take the city to the country, where there is pure air to breathe and good food obtainable withous the cost of transportation. Instead of transporting coal, or using it to transport food products, the coal can be turned into electricity at the mines and thus be converted into "fuel" which will do its own traveling at the rate of 186,000 miles a second.

If electricity can bring the social and educational advantages as well as conveniences to the country, no motive is left for living in crowded sections. The disease and unrest incident to congested living conditions may thus become a thing of the past, thanks to the application of this cheap and efficient power.

Certainly complex and hurried life in the larger cities has reached such a stage that it must soon turn again toward simpler and more healthful lines. The home has been almost crowded out of the lives of city dwellers. If electricity is to be the means of bringing back something of the normalness and wholesomeness of life in the open country spaces, as Mr. Coffin predicts, it will have performed no mean function in bringing happiness to mankind.

There has been a long season of silence from the fellow who has a penchant for proposing three cheers.

The coal industry needs a doctor, avers a contemporary. Not any more than the Esch-Cummins law needs a dentist.

A coal operator says the consumer will be the loser in the strike settlement. How an idea, once started, travels.

Residents of Minnesota turned out to fight 200 fires. There are signs that this will be looked back upon next winter as having been strictly a summer sport.

Civilization will take a long leap upward as quickly as those who shoot someone else and turn the gun on themselves can be induced to reverse the perceedure.

While we are on the subject of thrift, perhaps the Pennsylvania coal miner who has been in this country 18 years and has saved $10,000 will be pointed to as a striking example.

Mothers appreciate the fact that getting the children off to school again will be the same old added task, but they realize, too, that with school in session they at least know where the children are.

A woman has been left $185,500 in a will, on condition that she apologize to her brother for once having said he would "ruin the family." It is believed that she will comply with the condition to prevent him from ruining at least one member of the family that she knows of.

PALACE THEATRE

Curwood's latest and greatest "The Girl from Porcupine" by James Oliver Curwood, which is to be seen at the Palace theatre today and tomorrow, is one of those pictures even the tired motion picture fan cannot afford to miss.

It was written especially for the screen by this great writer, James Oliver Curwood, and demonstrates, perhaps, better than any other picture ever shown, what a plastic material afforded by the screen can be made to do in the hands of an artistic writer. The man who knows his types and country and his atmosphere as Curwood does.

James Oliver Curwood lives among scenes which he describes, knows nature in the great northwest in every mood, knows the desert rat, the adventurous miner, the way-faring orphan, the women of the dance hall and the rough characters which are to be found on the outer fringe of modern civilization. In fact, he knows the wilds (and also still exist). Curwood puts the life of the wilds on the screen.

Anybody who wants to see a real American picture produced and acted by Americans, thoroughly American in sentiment should not neglect the opportunity of visiting the theatre to see "The Girl from Porcupine." Faire Binney, Buster Collier and the supporting cast do remarkably conscientious work in the picture, which is splendidly directed, well acted and beautifully photographed. The all around combination has produced a wonderful result.

Experts who have seen this great picture unhesitatingly declare that it is one of the best acted pieces of work ever seen on Broadway. All concerned in the production entered heart and soul in the work last summer and fall and the result is a wonderful triumph.

For the opening of Grawell's Ideal theatre Thursday evening, the new management has selected the Metro screen version of "Turn to the Right," one of the most popular comedy dramas of the stage and for the reason that the stage version was produced by John Golden, who gave us "Lightnin'" and many other real human interest plays and the screen direction is by Rex Ingram who produced "The Four Horsemen." It is not a high society drama—the screen has been overstocked with these of late—but it does reach the heart, and is chock full of wholesome comedy and pathos and is the sort of screen entertainment that sends people from the theatre feeling better toward the world and its problems and more kindly toward their fellowmen.

It tells the story of a country boy who, while serving a prison term unjustly, becomes acquainted with two crooks. Returning home he finds the mortgage about to be foreclosed by the village skinflint. With the aid of his two crook pals a way is found to beat out the miser while the influence of the aged mother leads the two crooks into love and a better life.

It is presented by a notable cast headed by Alice Terry who won an enviable reputation in "The Four Horsemen" and "The Conquering Power." Playing opposite her is Jack Mulhall, known on both stage and screen. Others in the cast are Harry Myers, who was the Yankee in "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court"; George Cooper, Edward Connelly, Lydia Knott, Betty Allen, Margaret Loomis, William Bletcher, Eric Mayne and Ray Ripley.

RECORD SOYBEAN HARVEST COMING

PROFESSOR GEORGE BRIGGS GIVES ADVICE IN REGARD TO HANDLING OF CROP; MAKES GOOD HAY.

The greatest acreage of soybean hay ever known in Wisconsin is now being harvested.

Hundreds of Badger farmers have from 12 to 15 acres of this hay to cut and many have as high as 50 acres or more.

"Select the best conditions possible to cut your soybean hay regardless of the condition of the pods," warns George M. Briggs of the agricultural staff of the University of Wisconsin. "There is the most nourishment in the plants when the lower pods are partially developed, but don't wait if you've got good hay weather. Especially is this true for northern Wisconsin farmers.

"The best quality of hay is made by putting the beans in small cock, while yet in the wilting stage. While in this condition the plants pack together more firmly. And, from the experiments conducted on the Spooner branch station, they shed water better than any of the other legumes. On land where the soil under the cocks has a tendency to remain wet, possibly the cocks will have to be turned a few hours before handling.

The best way to stack soy bean hay according to Briggs is in layers. He recommends first a layer of soybean hay about a foot thick, then a layer of about five inches of straw or other coarse dry hay, then another soybean layer, and so on.

A sprinkling of salt on each layer of soybeans helps wonderfully in the curing process. Livestock will even eat the straw with relish when stacked in this way, maintains the "soybean" man.

Soybean hay may be cut and handled the same as red clover says the legume specialist, using mower, side delivery rake, and hay loader. However, on small areas a better grade of hay can be put by letting the beans cure in the cock.

A "Court of Honor of the Nations" will be established in ten blocks, each block being set aside for one of the principal Allied powers with corresponding flags and decorations. RECORD SOYBEAN HARVEST COMING

PROFESSOR GEORGE BRIGGS GIVES ADVICE IN REGARD TO HANDLING OF CROP; MAKES GOOD HAY.

The greatest acreage of soybean hay ever known in Wisconsin is now being harvested.

Hundreds of Badger farmers have from 12 to 15 acres of this hay to cut and many have as high as 50 acres or more.

"Select the best conditions possible to cut your soybean hay regardless of the condition of the pods," warns George M. Briggs of the agricultural stall of the University of Wisconsin. "There is the most nourishment in the plants when the lower pods are partially developed, but don't wait if you've got good hay weather. Especially is this true for northern Wisconsin farmers.

"The best quality of hay is made by putting the beans in small cock, while yet in the wilting stage. While in this condition the plants pack together more firmly. And, from the experiments conducted on the Spooner branch station, they shed water better than any of the other legumes. On land where the soil under the cocks has a tendency to remain wet, possibly the cocks will have to be turned a few hours before handling.

The best way to stack soy bean hay according to Briggs is in layers. He recommends first a layer of soybean hay about a foot thick, then a layer of about five inches of straw or other coarse dry hay, then another soybean layer, and so on.

A sprinkling of salt on each layer of soybeans helps wonderfully in the curing process. Livestock will even eat the straw with relish when stacked in this way, maintains the "soybean" man.

Soybean hay may be cut and handled the same as red clover says the legume specialist, using mower, side delivery rake, and hay loader. However, on small areas a better grade of hay can be put by letteing the beans cure in the cock.

"Was it the collar you were looking for in the cupboard?" said Bill eagerly.

"Of course. 'Why no collar?' I said For some reason Cayley considered it necessary to hide all Mark's clothes; not just the suit, but everything which he was wearing, or supposed to be wearing, at the time of the murder. But he hadn't hidden the collar. Why? Had he left it out by mistake? So I looked in the cupboard. It wasn't there. Had he left it out on purpose If so, why?—and where was it? Naturally I began to say to myself. 'Where have I seen a collar lately? A collar all by itself?' And I remembered—what, Bill?"

Bill frowned heavily to himself, and shook his head.

"Don't ask me, Tony. I can't—By Jove." He threw up his head. "In the basket in the office bed room!"

"Exactly."

"But is that the one?"

"The one that goes with the rest of the clothes? I don't know. Where else can it be? But if so, why send the collar quite casually to the wash in the ordinary way, and take immense trouble to hide everything else? Why, why, why?"

Bill bit hard at his pipe, but could think of nothing to say.

"Anyhow," said Antony, getting up restlessly, "I'm certain of one thing. Mark knew on the Monday that Robert was coming here."

CHAPTER XVIII

The coroner, having made a few commonplace remarks as to the terrible nature of the tragedy which they had come to investigate that afternoon, proceeded to outline the case to the jury.

Antony did not expect to learn much from the evidence—he knew the facts of the case so well by now—but he wondered if Inspector Birch had developed any new theories. If so, they would appear in the coroner's examination, for the coroner would certainly have been coached by the police as to the important facts to be extracted from each witness. Bill was the first to be put through it.

"Now, about this letter, Mr. Beverley?" he was asked when his chief evidence was over. "Did you see it at all?"

"I didn't see the actual writing. I saw the back of it. Mark was holding it up when he told us about his brother."

"You don't know what was in it, then?"

Bill had a sudden shock. He had read the letter only that morning. He knew quite well what was in it. But it wouldn't do to admit this. And then, just as he was about to perjure himself, he remembered: Antony had heard Cayley telling Inspector.

"I knew afterwards. I was told. But Mark didn't read it out at breakfast."

"You gathered, however, that it was an unwelcome letter?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Would you say that Mark was frightened by it?"

"Not frightened. Sort of bitter—and resigned. Sort of 'Oh, Lord, here we are again!'"

There was a titter here and there. The coroner smiled, and tried to pretend that he hadn't.

"Thank you, Mr. Beverley."

The next witness was summoned by the name of Andrew Amos, and Antony looked up with interest, wondering who he was.

"He lives at the inner lodge," whispered Bill to him.

All that Amos had to say was that a stranger had passed by his lodge at a little before three that afternoon, and had spoken to him. He had seen the body and recognized it as the man.

"What did he say?"

"'Is this right for the Red House?' or something like that, sir."

"I said, 'This is the Red House. Who do you want to see?' He was a bit rough-looking, you know, sir, and I didn't know what he was doing there."

"Well?"

"Well, sir, he said, 'Is Mister Mark Ablett at home?' It doesn't sound much put like that, sir, but I didn't care about the way he said it. So I got in front of him like, and said, 'What do you want, eh?' and he gave a sort of chuckle and said, 'I want to see my dear brother Mark.'

"Well, then I took a closer look at him, and I see that p'raps he might be his brother, so I said, 'if you'll follow the drive, sir, you'll come to the house. Of course I can't say if Mr. Ablett's at home.' And he gave a sort of nasty laugh again, and said, 'Fine place Mister Mark Ablett's got here. Plenty of money to spend, eh?' Well, then I had another look at him, but before I could make up my mind, he laughed and went on. That's all I can tell you, sir."

Andrew Amos stepped down and moved away to the back of the room, nor did Antony take his eyes off him until he was assured that Amos intended to remain there until the inquest was over.

"Who's Amos talking to now?" he whispered to Bill.

"Parsons. One of the gardeners. He's at the outside lodge on the Stanton road. They're all here today. Sort of holiday for 'em."

"I wonder if he's giving evidence, too," thought Antony.

He was. He followed Amos. He had been at work on the lawn in front of the house, and had seen Robert Ablett arrive. He didn't hear the shot—not to notice. He was a little hard of hearing. He had seen a gentleman arrive about five minutes after Mr. Robert.

"Can you see him in court now?" asked the coroner.

Parsons looked round slowly. Antony caught his eye and smiled.

"That's him," said Parsons, pointing.

Everybody looked at Antony.

"That was about five minutes afterward?"

"About that, sir."

"Did anybody come out of the house before this gentleman's arrival?"

"No sir. That is to say I didn't see 'em."

Stevens followed. She gave her evidence much as she had given it to the Inspector. Nothing new was brought out by her examination. Then came Elsie. As the reporters scribbled down what she had overheard, they added in brackets "Sensation" for the first time that afternoon.

"How soon after you had heard this did the shot come?" asked the coroner.

"Almost at once, sir."

"Were you still in the hall?"

"Oh, no sir. I was just outside Mrs. Stevens' room. The housekeeper, sir."

"You didn't think of going back to the hall to see what had happened?"

"Oh, no, sir. I just went in to Mrs. Stevens, and she said, 'Oh, what was that?' frightened-like. And I said, 'That was in the house, Mrs. Stevens, that was.' Just like something going off, it was."

"Thank you," said the coroner.

There was another emotional disturbance in the room as Cayley went into the witness-box; not "Sensation" this time, but an eager and, as it seemed to Antony, sympathetic interest. Now they were getting to grips with the drama.

He gave his evidence carefully, unemotionally—the lies with the same slow deliberation as the truth. Antony watched him intently, wondering what it was about him which had this odd sort of attractiveness. For Antony, who knew that he was lying, and lying (as he believed) not for Mark's sake but his own, yet could not help sharing some of that general sympathy with him.

"Was Mark ever in possession of a revolver?" asked the coroner.

"Not to my knowledge. I think I should have known if he had been."

"You were alone with him all that morning. Did he talk about this visit of Robert's at all?"

"I didn't see very much of him in the morning. I was at work in my room, and outside, and so on. We lunched together and he talked of it then a little."

"In what terms?"

"Well—" he hesitated, and then went on, "I can't think of a better word than 'peevishly.'

"You didn't hear any conversation between the brothers when they were in the office together?"

"No. I happened to go into the library just after Mark had gone in, and I was there all the time."

"Was the library door open?"

"Oh, yes."

"Did you see or hear the last witness at all?"

"No."

"Would you call Mark a hasty-tempered man?"

Cayley considered this carefully before answering.

"Hasty-tempered, yes," he said. "But not violent-tempered."

"Was he fairly athletic? Active and quick?"

"Active and quick, yes. Not particularly strong."

"Yes. . . . One question more. Was Mark in the habit of carrying any considerable sum of money about with him?"

"Yes. He always had one 100 lbs. note on him, and perhaps ten or twenty pounds as well."

"Thank you, Mr. Cayley."

Cayley went back heavily to his seat

"Damn it," said Antony to himself, "why do I like the fellow?"

"Antony Gillingham!"

Again the eager interest of the room could be felt. Who was this stranger who got mixed up in the business so mysteriously?"

Antony smiled at Bill and stepped up to give his evidence.

He explained how he came to be staying at the "George" at Wooham, how he had heard that the Red House was in the neighborhood, how he had walked over to see his friend Beverley, and had arrived just after the tragedy. Thinking it over afterward he was fairly certain that he had heard the shot, but it had not made any impression on him at the time.

"You and the last witness reached the french windows together and found them shut?"

"Yes."

"You pushed them in and came to the body. Of course you had an idea whose body it was?"

"No."

"Did Mr. Cayley say anything?"

"He turned the body over, just so as to see the face, and when he saw it, he said, "'Thank God!'"

Again the reporters wrote "Sensation."

"Did you understand what he meant by that?"

"I asked him who it was, and he said that it was Robert Ablett. Then he explained that he was afraid at first it was the cousin with whom he lived—Mark."

"Yes. Did he seem upset?"

"Very much so at first. Less when he found that it wasn't Mark."

"Was it the collar you were looking for in the cupboard?" said Bill eagerly.

"Of course. Why no collar?" I said For some reason Cayley considered it necessary to hide all Mark's clothes; not just the suit, but everything which he was wearing, or supposed to be wearing, at the time of the murder. But he hadn't hidden the collar. Why? Had he left it out by mistake? So I looked in the cupboard. It wasn't there. Had he left it out on purpose If so, why?—and where was it? Naturally I began to say to myself. 'Where have I seen a collar lately? A collar all by itself?" And I remembered—what, Bill?"

Bill frowned heavily to himself, and shook his head.

"Don't ask me, Tony. I can't—By Jove." He threw up his head. "In the basket in the office bed room!"

"Exactly."

"But is that the one?"

"The one that goes with the rest of the clothes? I don't know. Where else can it be? But if so, why send the collar quite casually to the wash in the ordinary way, and take immense trouble to hide everything else? Why, why, why?"

Bill bit hard at his pipe, but could think of nothing to say.

"Anyhow," said Antony, getting up restlessly, "I'm certain of one thing. Mark knew on the Monday that Robert was coming here."

CHAPTER XVIII

The coroner, having made a few commonplace remarks as to the terrible nature of the tragedy which they had come to investigate that afternoon, proceeded to outline the case to the jury.

Antony did not expect to learn much from the evidence—he knew the facts of the case so well by now—but he wondered if Inspector Birch had developed any new theories. If so, they would appear in the coroner's examination, for the coroner would certainly have been coached by the police as to the important facts to be extracted from each witness. Bill was the first to be put through it.

"Now, about this letter, Mr. Beverley?" he was asked when his chief evidence was over. "Did you see it at all?"

"I didn't see the actual writing. I saw the back of it. Mark was holding it up when he told us about his brother."

"You don't know what was in it, then?"

Bill had a sudden shock. He had read the letter only that morning. He knew quite well what was in it. But it wouldn't do to admit this. And then, just as he was about to perjure himself, he remembered: Antony had heard Cayley telling Inspector.

"I knew afterwards. I was told. But Mark didn't read it out at breakfast."

"You gathered, however, that it was an unwelcome letter?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Would you say that Mark was frightened by it?"

"Not frightened. Sort of bitter—and resigned. Sort of 'Oh, Lord, here we are again!"

There was a titter here and there. The coroner smiled, and tried to pretend that he hadn't.

"Thank you, Mr. Beverley."

The next witness was summoned by the name of Andrew Amos, and Antony looked up with interest, wondering who he was.

"He lives at the inner lodge," whispered Bill to him.

All that Amos had to say was that a stranger had passed by his lodge at a little before three that afternoon, and had spoken to him. He had seen the body and recognized it as the man.

"What did he say?"

"'Is this right for the Red House?" or something like that, sir."

"I said, "This is the Red House. Who do you want to see?" He was a bit rough-looking, you know, sir, and I didn't know what he was doing there."

"Well?"

"Well, sir, he said, "Is Mister Mark Ablett at home?" It doesn't sound much put like that, sir, but I didn't care about the way he said it. So I got in front of him like, and said, "What do you want, eh?" and he gave a sort of chuckle and said, "I want to see my dear brother Mark."

"Well, then I took a closer look at him, and I see that p'raps he might be his brother, so I said, "if you'll follow the drive, sir, you'll come to the house. Of course I can't say if Mr. Ablett's at home.' And he gave a sort of nasty laugh again, and said, 'Fine place Mister Mark Ablett's got here. Plenty of money to spend, eh?" Well, then I had another look at him, but before I could make up my mind, he laughed and went on. That's all I can tell you, sir."

Andrew Amos stepped down and moved away to the back of the room, nor did Antony take his eyes off him until he was assured that Amos intended to remain there until the inquest was over.

"Who's Amos talking to now?" he whispered to Bill.

"Parsons. One of the gardeners. He's at the outside lodge on the Stanton road. They're all here today. Sort of holiday for 'em."

"I wonder if he's giving evidence, too," thought Antony.

He was. He followed Amos. He had been at work on the lawn in front of the house, and had seen Robert Ablett arrive. He didn't hear the shot—not to notice. He was a little hard of hearing. He had seen a gentleman arrive about five minutes after Mr. Robert.

"Can you see him in court now?" askd the coroner.

Parsons looked round slowly. Antony caught his eye and smiled.

"That's him," said Parsons, pointing.

Everybody looked at Antony.

"That was about five minutes afterward?"

"About that, sir."

"Did anybody come out of the house before this gentleman's arrival?"

"No sir. That is to say I didn't see 'em."

Stevens followed. She gave her evidence much as she had given it to the Inspector. Nothing new was brought out by her examination. Then came Elsie. As the reporters scribbled down what she had overheard, they added in brackets "Sensation" for the first time that afternoon.

"How soon after you had heard this did the shot come?" asked the coroner.

"Almost at once, sir."

"Were you still in the hall?"

"Oh, no sir. I was just outside Mrs. Stevens' room. The housekeeper, sir."

"You didn't think of going back to the hall to see what had happened?"

"Oh, no, sir. I just went in to Mrs. Stevens, and she said, "Oh, what was that?" frightened-like. And I said, "That was in the house, Mrs. Stevens, that was.' Just like something going off, it was."

"Thank you," said the coroner.

There was another emotional disturbance in the room as Cayley went into the witness-box; not "Sensation" this time, but an eager and, as it seemed to Antony, sympathetic interest. Now they were getting to grips with the drama.

He gave his evidence carefully, unemotionally—the lies with the same slow deliberation as the truth. Antony watched him intently, wondering what it was about him which had this odd sort of attractiveness. For Antony, who knew that he was lying, and lying (as he believed) not for Mark's sake but his own, yet could not help sharing some of that general sympathy with him.

"Was Mark ever in possession of a revolver?" asked the coroner.

"Not to my knowledge. I think I should have known if he had been."

"You were alone with him all that morning. Did he talk about this visit of Robert's at all?"

"I didn't see very much of him in the morning. I was at work in my room, and outside, and so on. We lunched together and he talked of it then a little."

"In what terms?"

"Well—" he hesitated, and then went on, "I can't think of a better word than 'peevishly.'

"You didn't hear any conversation between the brothers when they were in the office together?"

"No. I happened to go into the library just after Mark had gone in, and I was there all the time."

"Was the library door open?"

"Oh, yes."

"Did you see or hear the last witness at all?"

"No."

"Would you call Mark a hasty-tempered man?"

Cayley considered this carefully before answering.

"Hasty-tempered, yes," he said. "But not violent-tempered."

"Was he fairly athletic? Active and quick?"

"Active and quick, yes. Not particularly strong."

"Yes. . . One question more. Was Mark in the habit of carrying any considerable sum of money about with him?"

"Yes. He always had one 100 lbs. note on him, and perhaps ten or twenty pounds as well."

"Thank you, Mr. Cayley."

Cayley went back heavily to his seat

"Damn it," said Antony to himself, "why do I like the fellow?"

"Antony Gillinghaim!"

Again the eager interest of the room could be felt. Who was this stranger who got mixed up in the business so mysteriously?"

Antony smiled at Bill and stepped up to give his evidence.

He explained how he came to be staying at the "George" at Wooham, how he had heard that the Red House was in the neighborhood, how he had walked over to see his friend Beverley, and had arrived just after the tragedy. Thinking it over afterward he was fairly certain that he had heard the shot, but it had not made any impression on him at the time.

"You and the last witness reached the french windows together and found them shut?"

"Yes."

"You pushed them in and came to the body. Of course you had an idea whose body it was?"

"No."

"Did Mr. Cayley say anything?"

"He turned the body over, just so as to see the face, and when he saw it, he said, "Thank God!" "

Again the reporters wrote "Sensation."

"Did you understand what he meant by that?"

"I asked him who it was, and he said that it was Robert Ablett. Then he explained that he was afraid at first it was the cousin with whom he lived—Mark."

"Yes. Did he seem upset?"

"Very much so at first. Less when he found that it wasn't Mark."

Lassie is a Wonderful Canine Actress

In "The Girl from Porcupine," which comes here today will be seen one of the most remarkable animal actors ever appearing on the screen.

This dog, Lassie by name, is said by Mr. Henderson, who directed the picture, to be the most intelligent animal he has ever encountered in his years of picture making.

In the scenes of this picture, which were written by the eminent author, James Oliver Curwood, the action calls for a dog mourning over the death of her master and so intelligently did Lassie play her part that it would seem she must be imbued with human intelligence. We have all seen the dog lying on the grave but to see a dog go out into the fields alone and gather in her mouth a bunch of wild flowers and carry them back and place them on the grave; then kneeling with her feet on the head stone raising her head against the simple slab, and with actual tears in her eyes, is something that to the knowledge of the writer of this article, has never before been seen in pictures.

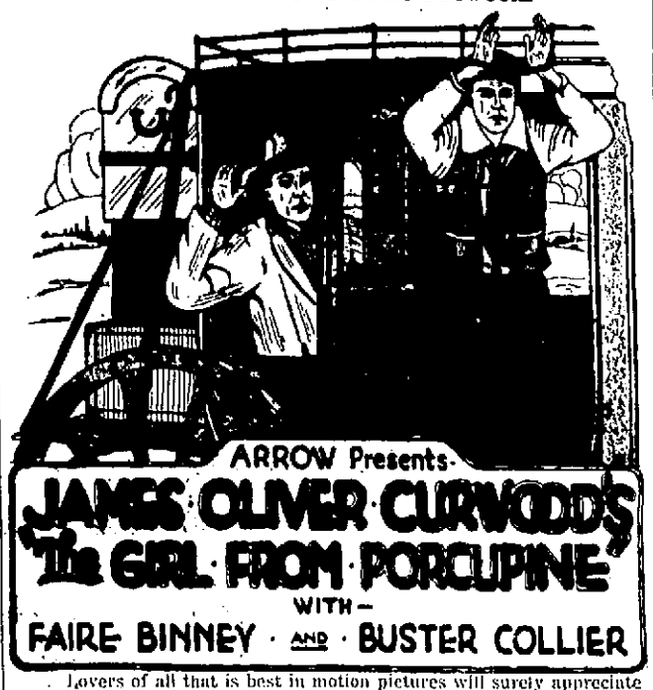
Lassie is a Wonderful Canine Actress

In "The Girl from Porcupine," which comes here today will be seen one of the most remarkable animal actors ever appearing on the screen.

This dog, Lassie by name, is said by Mr. Henderson, who directed the picture, to be the most intelligent animal he has ever encountered in his years of picture making.

In the scenes of this picture, which were written by the eminent author, James Oliver Curwood, the action calls for a dog mourning over the death of her master and so intelligently did Lassie play her part that it would seem she must be imbued with human intelligence. We have all seen the dog lying on the grave but to see a dog go out into the fields alone and gather in her mouth a bunch of wild flowers and carry them back and place them on the grave; then kneeling with her feet on the head stone raising her head against the simple slab, and with actual tears in her eyes, is something that to the knowledge of the writer of this article, has never before been seen in pictures.

A FINE BIG OUT OF DOORS PICTURE



Lovers of all that is best in motion pictures will surely appreciate this beautiful effort of the screen art. The author has written a very tender and human interest story and has put on paper a number of interesting and lovable types which have been translated to the screen by wonderful skill, such as is possessed by Dell Henderson, to whom the utmost credit is due for the fine piece of pictorial and dramatic work.

UNAUTHORIZED WALKOUTS ON ALTON AND JOLIET ARE CALLED OFF: AUTHORITIES INVESTIGATE ALLEGED PLOTS.

(By Associated Press)

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 30—Continued bomb outrages and other forms of violence, inquiries into wrecks and alleged sabotage plots, a settlement of unauthorized walkouts by trainmen on the Chicago & Alton, Elgin, Joliet & Eastern, and Missouri Pacific, and an appeal to congress by railway maintenance of way employes for an amendment to the transportation act assuring a "living wage" for rail workers, featured the sixty-first daily chapter of the nation-wide railroad strike today.

Meanwhile, chiefs of the "Big Four" transportation brotherhoods meeting at Cleveland, asserted their attitude over the shop men's strike remained unchanged.

C. & A. Tie Up Ends

The end of the tie-up on the Chicago & Alton came early today when striking train men at Slater, Mo., agreed to return to work. Their action followed similar steps by Alton men at Roodhouse, Ill., and by train crews and switchmen on the E. J. & E. at Joliet.

The blockade on the E. J. & E. outer belt line to the Chicago steel and shipping district, had continued since August 8, when a railroad detective and striker were slain and Sheriff Newkirk was wounded in strike riots.

Harry Wills Puts K. O. On Jackson In Three Rounds

Brooklyn, N. W., Aug. 30—Harry Wills, challenger for Jack Dempsey's title, annihilated Tut Jackson, negro heavyweight aspirant, in three short rounds at Ebbets field last night. Jackson, heralded as a coming champion, didn't have a chance before the crime onslaught of the big black, and the result was not doubted from the opening bell.

Wills won so easily that he didn't lose a kink out of his hair. He massacred Jackson from the moment he sized up the Ohioan's style, and with scarcely an effort at his job he hammered him into helplessness with stomach and kidney blows, finishing him with a terrific right drive on the kidneys after two minutes and five seconds of the third round.

Wills, considered from the standpoint of Dempsey, looks a lot more dangerous than he did. He solved the question of his ability as a body puncher, but he fights wide open, and it looks as if Dempsey would rip through his wide defense and murder him with short arm body blows.

The power of his body blows was so great that Jackson was unable to walk alone five minutes after the assault and battery ceased, and was evidently suffering great pain as the result of the lefts to his stomach and the fierce pounding on his kidneys.

The Yankees hit Johnson but needed home runs by Pipp and Ruth to score two of their three runs. It was Ruth's twenty-seventh home run of the season. Peckinpaugh collided with Jones in the fourth inning and had to leave the game.
